

ENGINEER'S REPORT

Bedford's Water Supply Recently Investigated by

HARVEY LINTON, ESQ.,

Leakage Can be Repaired and Capacity of Reservoir Increased—Main Pipe Not Satisfactory.

Last Friday and Saturday Mr. Harvey Linton of Altoona was at this place on request of the Borough Council to investigate the water supply. His report was received Wednesday night by the Secretary of Council, George Points, Esq., and the following are extracts from the same:

The Steiner pump is capable of pumping 600 gallons per minute. The water-intake of this plant is said to be up-stream from all sewer outfalls on the river. There are said to be a large number of springs in the river, within a few miles above the intake, which together make a large percentage of the flow of the stream in times of drouth.

The Todd Reservoir

One cause of the leakage in the Todd reservoir is from the western end and can be repaired by puddling; another is through the embankment, which will cause more trouble. After those are repaired a small gasoline engine and pump could return to the main a leakage of any considerable amount. The capacity could be increased by the removal of the old reservoir embankment which is left standing in the area submerged. The area of the watershed is estimated at from one to two square miles.

Artesian wells, which had been suggested, could hardly be expected to be successful in this locality.

The Milburn Reservoir

He suggests that the embankment of the Milburn reservoir be raised; its present capacity, six million gallons, could thereby be increased. The supply main is a 4-inch cast iron pipe that has been in place 30 years, and, consequently, is not to be considered for further satisfactory service. The size of a new main can best be decided by a survey.

Near the Milburn reservoir, on lands of Joseph Beemiller and Mrs. Rebecca Barefoot, small reservoirs, holding 600,000 gallons, could be constructed and would be supplied by springs nearby.

Search for Military Highway

Last week Henry W. Temple, Professor of History in Washington and Jefferson College, John Kennedy Lacock, Professor of History at Harvard, and E. K. Miller, stenographer, of Canonsburg, stopped in Bedford for a few days. They were walking to Pittsburgh, searching for the route of the old Forbes Military Road, over which Generals Washington and Forbes marches with 5,800 men.

They were unable to accomplish anything in the borough and could not locate the old fording at Milltown, now Wolfburg. They established the fact, however, that the route passed through Schellsburg instead of along the bottom road.

Prof. Lacock, if he is successful in locating the route, will publish a book on old highways. He has many valuable maps and charts to guide them in their search.

GRADE CROSSINGS

For Midland Granted by Blair County Court.

E. W. Clark, assistant engineer of the Bedford and Hollidaysburg Railroad, testified in the Blair County court on Saturday that the probable daily traffic over this railroad at the outset will consist of two passenger trains each way, a through freight and a local freight. The railroad will cross "several public highways at grade, but the only road on which there is much travel is Johnstown Street, East Freedom, where the company will build a passenger station, and any other than a grade crossing at that point is therefore impracticable.

Mr. Clark proceeded to point out that it would not be feasible to build either subways or overhead bridges, crossing the township roads, owing to the level condition of the country, and the great expense that would be thereby incurred. That locality is only sparsely settled, and trains can be seen for a great distance.

The petition of the company, asking authority of the court for the construction of grade crossings, was granted.

In the evening the same committee installed the pastor at the Schellsburg Presbyterian Church. Rev. Townsend presided and proposed the questions required, preached the sermon, and charged the pastor, while Rev. Kennedy offered the prayer of installation and gave the charge to the people. At the close of this service, when the new pastor had pronounced the benediction, the congregation came forward and gave a welcome to their new pastor, who enters upon his charge with many hopes of success.

He was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Everett a few months ago and his ministrations there are highly spoken of. He expects to occupy the parsonage in Everett in October.

Will Purchase Creameries

The Sanitary Dairy Company, the most extensive milk dealer in Johnstown, is now negotiating for the purchase of the two plants belonging to the Farmers' Creamery Company, one located at Woodbury and the other at New Enterprise, this county. It will be remembered that the company's own plant at Woodbury was recently destroyed by fire. It is now their desire to secure the Farmers' Creamery Company plants, which will, if the deal is closed, add about 1,600 gallons a day to the supply. The company now secures 500 gallons daily from Morrison's Cove.

The Sanitary people sell almost 2,000 gallons of milk and cream a day, and this is hardly sufficient to supply the demand. With the Woodbury and New Enterprise plants added, however, it is expected the situation will be permanently relieved.

Business Transacted During the Past Week.

On Monday a petition was presented to the court on behalf of the Bedford and Hollidaysburg Railroad Company, stating that it is about to complete the construction of its railroad from a point in Bedford County at Imier to Brook's Mills, in the County of Blair.

The petition set forth that in the construction of said railroad it is desired to cross at grade the road leading from Bedford Pike to the village of Queen, as the construction above or below would be so expensive as to be prohibitive. On motion the court granted permission to cross at grade.

At a session of court held on Wednesday by the Associate Judges the following matters were transacted:

In re Mrs. Josephine Hazard vs. J. L. Putt, motion for judgment for want of an affidavit of defense; judgment ordered as prayed.

UNDER THE SURFACE

An Incident That Brought Content to a Dissatisfied Woman.

By ROY RICHARDSON.

"I'm sorry we're invited," observed Mrs. Edmonds to her husband as they dressed to go out. "We shan't have a good time."

"Why?" her husband inquired. "I always liked Ned."

"Yes," responded Mrs. Edmonds. "I like them both, but, Will, try as hard as I may, they make me absurdly jealous."

Mr. Edmonds grew serious. "The old excuse, Grace. I thought you had outgrown that bad habit. We've got so much that they can never have. There!" he cried, pinching her cheek. "Let's put it aside. We have each other, while you know they quarrel. We must have them here some evening soon. You can sing while I juggle the chafing dish. Ned Constable never could make a decent rabbit. His wife won't let him learn how."

Mrs. Edmonds sighed even at her husband's picture of a pleasant evening at home. "I shall depend upon you," she said as they rang the Constable doorbell, "to keep me contented tonight, Will."

It was quite an affair. Mr. and Mrs. Constable, whatever they might be when alone, were a charming host and hostess.

"How well they do it!" exclaimed Mrs. Edmonds to her husband as they sat eating. Then, with a dangerous tone in her voice, she said, "I wish oh, so much, that you and I—"

"There, there," Edmonds broke in gently. "We're not going to speak of that, dearie. By Jove!" he ejaculated suddenly. "I do believe there's old Tom Goodwin over there all by himself. You remember Tom, don't you, Grace—the fellow who was too poor to come to our wedding and who said he was sending forks instead of buying a railroad ticket? I haven't seen him for months. He writes things, I believe. You must meet him, good old chap."

"Do you know," Goodwin remarked a few moments later, seating himself beside his new found friends. "I always promised myself the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Edmonds. And now," and his genial face beamed with good nature, "I see how true it is that unexpected pleasures are the keenest. Funny thing, Mrs. Edmonds, but I didn't want to come here at all."

At this Edmonds smiled at his wife. "Neither did we. Now we are glad we did," he said. "But, Tom, why haven't you called? You might have shut us before this in the directory."

"Oh, yes," Tom rejoined, "but you're such dreadful swells I didn't dare you see," he explained while Mrs. Edmonds tried to tell him how modest they really were. "I'm just beginning. When you just begin people don't like you, and mostly you don't take to them, and so I have thought it best to keep away by myself until I had done something worth while."

Goodwin made himself very agreeable, and Mrs. Edmonds liked him. Her husband got deep in debate with a business acquaintance, and the two men presently drifted to the other side of the room, so when the music began in the conservatory Goodwin took Mrs. Edmonds upstairs.

"It's awfully good of you, you know," he said to her as they seated themselves next a dense mass of palms in the ballroom, "not to insist on dancing, but to talk to me. You're so cheerful and seem so contented. Will is a fortunate man, Mrs. Edmonds."

"How odd! I was discontented and blue when I came here tonight," she said, "all because I was—well, I was covetous."

Tom laughed. "We all get that way at times, I fancy," he remarked. "Look at those De Puysters standing over there, the richest people here. You wouldn't be like them, but they are ridiculously jealous of the Four Hundred. How the Four Hundred fare we never know, but the De Puysters are them as far as they can, while some of us are silly enough to ape the De Puysters. I am glad you are not one of those."

Before Mrs. Edmonds could confess that indeed she was one of them there came to her ear from behind the palms by which they sat the sound of voices. They both recognized the tones of their host and hostess. It was an awkward position, but they could not have escaped being seen from over the palms.

Constable was evidently remonstrating with his wife. "You can't mean to pretend," he was saying, "to be keeping pace with the De Puysters. One would think you were, to see us tonight. I tell you, Anne, I can't afford it, and that's flat."

"That's what you're always saying. I can't afford this; can't pay for that," cried Mrs. Constable, with considerable heat. "Why don't you go into bankruptcy and be done with it? You never used to complain."

"We would look well bankrupt wouldn't we?" her spouse cut in. "I never used to complain, as you say, because I was getting rich fast then. It is changed now, and I'm often pinched for money to the verge of desperation. I've told you so, Anne. While I've no objection to your entertaining and having a good time, there's a limit to our means, you know, and where the devil the money for this is coming from I don't see."

"You never told me!" cried Mrs. Constable. "You merely said you were worried. And I'll tell you right now, Ned Constable, I do intend keeping pace with the De Puysters and flatter myself I have done so."

"He stuck me on change for $12,000 last week," muttered Constable. "You may be able to keep up the pace; but, by thunder, I can't at that figure, Anne!"

There was a pause. Then he said pacifically: "You go at it wrong, and, as your husband, I must correct you. Look at Will Edmonds and his wife. They are poor, as the world takes such people, but they are richer and happier than we are."

"Yes," exclaimed Mrs. Constable. "and live in a little place where you can hardly turn around and where you meet starved musicians, impecunious actors or authors who hope to startle the world some day. Perhaps you would like to change places with them."

"I may have to," Constable murmured, "before it is all over. Come, Anne; the people are going. We must get downstairs."

Goodwin and Mrs. Edmonds arose, he serious, she trembling.

"Tell me," he asked her, "should we have gone away?"

"Yes and no," she answered. "We couldn't without their knowing." Then, putting her hand in his as they came to Mr. Edmonds, she observed seriously: "A little while ago I was jealous of them, Mr. Goodwin. Now I am not, and my little place where you can hardly turn around seems sweet and good to me. Come and see us in it. We will welcome you, and you may get an idea how nice humility is. Good night. I thank you for being here."

As Grace and Will stood again in their own house later that night she said to him as she kissed him, with tears in her eyes: "I thank the Lord, Will, dearest, for our little place where some people can hardly turn around. Shut your eyes, Will, and say it after me: 'Bless our little place where you can hardly turn around. Amen!'"

DEMOCRATIC MONTHLY

Magazine Published by Chairman Mack—Good Articles.

Pennsylvania's recent Democratic Convention is covered at length and pictures of the Democratic State candidates are printed in the September number of the National Monthly now on the news stands. This is the new and very excellent magazine of which Chairman Norman E. Mack of the Democratic National Committee is the editor and publisher and which is doing an effective work in an effort to strengthen the Democratic party in the nation.

Hon. Alton B. Parker, former chief judge of the Court of Appeals of New York State, and Democratic candidate for President in 1904, reviews the new corporation tax at length in the September number of the National Monthly. Every business man in the country should read what as great an authority as Judge Parker has to say about this Republican tax. Hon. Champ Clark, minority leader of the House of Representatives, writes an exhaustive and critical review of the Republican revision of the tariff upwards, in the September National Monthly. It is needless to state that the gentleman from Missouri calls a spade a spade and when he says that the votes of some of the Republican members of Congress on the tariff were handed over to the corporations in return for contributions made to the Republican Congressional Campaign fund of last year Mr. Clark seems to know what he is talking about. These are a few of the several big political articles in the September number of the National Monthly. Other good articles include "The Divorce Monoplane," by Kate Burr; "The Difference in Women," by Helen Leigh; a brilliant article on United States Senator McEnery of Louisiana, by Frank B. Fifty Million of Handsome Memorial Designs to be Issued.

Washington, August 20.—Postmaster General Hitchcock has signed an order for the issuance of a new 2-cent stamp in commemoration of the Hudson-Fulton celebration which will be held in New York September 25 to October 9. Fifty million of these stamps will be issued, ready September 20. The design is oblong in shape, $\frac{1}{2}$ of an inch by $\frac{1}{4}$ inches in size, and comprises a border containing at the top this inscription "Hudson-Fulton Centenary," with the dates "1609" and "1909." Below this inscription in a curved line appears "U. S. Postage." At the bottom on each side is a prominent Arabic numeral "2" with the words "Two Cents" in a panel between the figures.

In the center is engraved a picture showing the Palisades of the Hudson River in the background, with the "Half Moon" sailing up the river and the "Clermont" steaming in the opposite direction. "KAPTIN KIDDO" IS OUT NEXT SUNDAY

North American's New Comic Series an Attractive Surprise.

The North American promises something out of the ordinary in the way of a feature for its comic section, and it will introduce it to its readers on Sunday, August 29.

The title of the new series is "The Turreble Tales of Kaptin Kiddo." Grace G. Wierselm draws the very attractive pictures of the "Kaptin's" adventures and Margaret G. Hays furnishes the tales. Both are out of the ordinary and both are attractive.

The little boy in the series is the same little boy that lives in every home where there is a little boy, and that same little boy is possessed of an imagination that is always active. Most every parent knows of a "Kaptin Kiddo."

The style of the work and the reputation of the joint authors ought to insure the immediate success of the series.

When Resting

When you rest do not place your arms above your head. Many women—most women—do so; but it is against the rules of physiology. That particular position tires the muscles of the arms and the chest, contracts the neck and forces one to breathe irregularly.

To Remove Iron Rust

Wet the spots of iron rust with water, then cover them quickly with cream of tartar. Roll up the garment so that the cream of tartar will remain on the spots and place it in a vessel with cold water and bring to the boiling point. The spots will have disappeared. This method is quick and effectual.

Don't use harsh physics. The reaction weakens the bowels, leads to chronic constipation. Get Doan's Regulents. They operate easily, tone the stomach, cure constipation.

To Remove Spots

To remove kerosene spots from a carpet sprinkle the place with cornmeal, brushing it out when it has laid a few hours. The kerosene will all come out by repeating the application, which will have to be done if much has been spilled.

DO IT NOW

Bedford People Should Not Wait Until It Is Too Late.

The appalling death-rate from kidney disease is due in most cases to the fact that the little kidney troubles are usually neglected until they become serious. The slight symptoms give place to chronic disorders and the sufferer goes gradually into the grasp of diabetes, dropsy, Bright's Disease, gravel or some other serious form of kidney complaint.

If you suffer from backache, headaches, dizzy spells; if the kidneys secrete are irregular or passage and unnatural in appearance, do not delay. Help the kidneys at once. Doan's Kidney Pills are especially for kidney disorders—they cure where others fail. Over one hundred thousand people have recommended them. Here's a case at home:

Samuel Belz, retired, Church St., Hyndman, Pa., says: "I suffered for some time from backache and other annoyances, arising from diseased kidneys. When I learned of Doan's Kidney Pills I procured them and it required just one box to effect a complete cure. I am today without a sign of kidney trouble and in view of my experience gladly add my name to the list of endorser of Doan's Kidney Pills."

Making Money On the Farm

IX.—Clover and Alfalfa Growing

By C. V. GREGORY.
Author of "Home Course in Modern Agriculture"
Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.

THERE is no crop grown on the farm which is more necessary or more profitable, all things considered, than some legume. Such a crop is profitable from the standpoint of the returns from an acre and doubly profitable when the fertility of the soil is considered. On the farm where much stock is kept legumes serve another purpose, that of furnishing cheap protein.

Clover Versus Alfalfa.
Throughout the corn belt clover is the most important legume. In western United States alfalfa is largely grown, while in the south cowpeas, soy beans and vetch are the principal legumes. The legume best adapted to your own locality is the best one to grow, at least until careful experiments have shown that some other is more profitable. In the west, where the soil is loose and dry, alfalfa sends down its long roots to a source of permanent water supply and yields abundant crops. Farther east, where the water table is so near the surface of the ground that the plants have "wet feet" during a considerable portion of the year, it does not do as well. In states east of the Missouri river clover is much more desirable. A small patch of alfalfa may be grown, but it does not fit into the system of farming well enough to be adopted on a large scale. It cannot be sown with the small grain in the spring with any surety of getting a stand. The seed is expensive, and the hay is more difficult to cure than clover.

Alfalfa does not come to its prime for about three years, so that it is not profitable to plow it up the second year, as is done with clover. For this reason it does not work well in the standard rotation of corn, oats and clover that meets with so much favor in the corn belt. It does not fit in with the rest of the work as well as clover either, as the first crop must be cut just when the corn is being laid by. When a good stand of alfalfa has been secured it yields twice as much as clover, but this extra yield is counterbalanced in most instances by its disadvantages.

Getting a Stand of Clover.
The question of getting a stand of clover is a troublesome one on many farms. This is due largely to improper methods. The first point to consider is the soil. Land that has been farmed a number of years is likely to be acid, a condition which makes it ill fitted to grow clover. This acidity can be overcome by adding ground limestone as suggested in article No. 2.

A seed bed in good tilth and free from weed seeds is also an important consideration. Little clover plants are very tender and cannot well compete with weeds or force their way through clods. Land that has been kept reasonably free from weeds the previous season is best for clover. Such land, prepared as for oats as described in article No. 4, makes an ideal seed bed for clover.

Clover seed should be tested for germination before sowing. If it does not germinate very well a larger amount to the acre will have to be sown. The seed should be cleaned carefully with a clover seed grader to remove all weed seeds. If purchased it should be examined very carefully to see that it contains no weed seeds. If much of the seed is badly shriveled it should be discarded or rely. This matter of testing the germinative strength of seed before the regular sowing is made does not receive the attention which its importance demands. It needs no argument to show that it is the part of prudence to make certain that this essential factor in the season's campaign is proved to be capable of fulfilling its requirement. The eye is by no means an infallible judge of grain offered for seed, and a more searching inquiry should be made.

Where clover is sown with timothy about eight pounds of the clover to four of timothy per acre is the proper amount. In a short rotation, however, it is better to leave out the timothy and use ten or twelve pounds of clover. Not all of this seed will grow the first year. The outer coat of a clover seed is very hard, and a considerable proportion of it does not soften enough to sprout the first season. It will come up the next spring and thicken the stand.

Seeding With Small Grain.
On light soils, especially if the spring is dry, the clover may be mixed with the oats directly and covered at the same depth. Where there is much clay in the soil or when the soil is rather wet at time of sowing the chances are that much of the clover seed will fall to come up at all if put in so deep. A better way is to go over the ground with a wheelbarrow sower after the oats have been disked in and cover the clover seed with the harrow. Most drills have a grass seed attachment which sows the clover broadcast between the rows of small grain. The harrowing which follows drilling will cover the clover seed.

Drilled grain, especially if drilled north and south, is a much better nurse crop than that sown broadcast. The sun gets in between the rows to the little clover plants and they grow much more rapidly than they do in broadcasted grain. Late grain does not make a satisfactory nurse crop. It stools out too much, and the ground is so dry and hard when it is finally harvested that the spindling clover cannot make much of a growth before winter. A luxuriant fall growth is the best guarantee against winter killing. Early oats or barley make an ideal nurse crop. They do not stool out much and are ripe early in July, thus giving the clover several months in which to grow before it is stopped by freezing weather. The first fall's growth should not be cut or pastured if a crop is wanted the following year. It is needed to hold the snow to protect the tender roots. In the spring the clover field should be examined early to see how it has come through the winter. The stand may need thickening by scattering a little seed over some of the thin spots, or the whole field may possibly be so badly damaged that it will be necessary to plow it up.

Curing Clover Hay.
Clover should be cut as soon as it is in full bloom and before many of the heads have turned brown. If cut earlier it is sappy and hard to cure. If left later it becomes woody. As soon as the cut clover has wilted a little in the swath it should be thrown together into light windrows, preferably with a side delivery rake. Cured in this way the leaves are less liable to become brittle and shake off. Well cured clover leaves are almost as valuable for feed as bran, so care should be taken to save as many of them as possible. As soon as the hay has cured sufficiently in the windrow it should be gathered up with a loader—if one can be had—and put in the barn. Clover has the reputation of being a troublesome crop to harvest, and many farmers are shy of it on that account. It is true that clover growing for profit demands a good deal of intelligence, but that is also the very factor which brings success in all agricultural enterprises. With proper attention to the habit of the plant and with the exercise of a modicum of judgment in its culture and harvesting there is nothing to be feared for the outcome.

Where it is desired to obtain a crop of seed the second crop should be used. The first crop seldom fills well and is always more valuable for hay than for seed. Most thrashing machines have a clover hulling attachment. It should be carefully adjusted so as to get all the seed. A bushel to a bushel and a half of seed per acre is a good yield. The yield of hay is from one to two tons to the acre for the first crop and a little more than half as much for the second crop. Where the fields are fenced the second crop may often be pastured to advantage.

Alsike clover finds a place on land that is too wet for the red variety. It does not yield as well, but it makes better pasture. By loosening up the sod in the low corners of the pasture with the disk and sowing four pounds of alsike to the acre its value may be greatly increased. In seeding a field to red clover it is well to scatter a little alsike in the low spots. It will be sure to grow whether the other does or not.

Handling Alfalfa.
What has been said about alfalfa does not mean that it is not to be grown at all except in the drier regions of the west, but that it is to be introduced into new regions carefully and on a small scale. The surest way to get a stand of alfalfa is to follow the land during the spring and early summer. About the middle of July a seed bed may be prepared and the alfalfa sown at the rate of twenty to twenty-five pounds to the acre. If the ground is not too dry a stand will usually be secured in this way, since the following will have destroyed most of the weeds. The objection to this plan is that no crop is obtained from the land that year.

A more economical way is to start with a crop of early oats or barley. As soon as this is harvested the land should be disked thoroughly and the alfalfa seed sown. If the ground is so dry and hard that the disk will not take hold it will have to be plowed. The main thing is to get the seed in as quickly as possible. The chances of securing a stand are much improved if a thin dressing of manure is given the land before sowing. After the alfalfa once gets a start it is very hardy and a good yielder, giving four to six tons of hay a year. It should be cut when about one-tenth of the plants are in bloom. The second spring a disk run over the field will split up the crowns and thicken the stand, discouraging the weeds and loosening the soil as well.

One Use For Matches.
A clerk in the black goods department of a Broadway store put a box of safety matches in his pocket before leaving home.

"They'll come in handy for my customers," he said, "not to light cigars or cigarettes—my customers don't smoke in the store—but to test the goods they buy. No doubt their trick is antediluvian. Eve may have tested fig leaves just that way in the garden of Eden for all I know; but, no matter how old fashioned it makes a person seem, there are plenty of women who will not buy a piece of cloth without setting a lighted match to one of the threads to see whether it burns or not. If the thread burns, the cloth is part cotton, and the shopper won't have it. If it doesn't burn, it's all wool, and she buys."—New York Globe.

An Elephant Experience.

A friend of mine told me of a curious experience. He was carefully stalking a big bull elephant in a large herd, when they got his wind, and a big cow elephant charged him. He jumped behind a large tree as the elephant reached him, and, being unable to stop herself in time, the elephant drove her tusks with such force into the trunk of the tree that they snapped off close to her head. The elephant was stunned for a moment, but luckily turned and galloped after the fast retreating herd, leaving him the possessor of some eighty pounds of ivory valued at about $250.—Circle Magazine.

Taking It Too Literally.

"What do you mean, sir," roared an irate father to a rejected suitor for the hand of his daughter, "by bringing your portmanteau to my house and ordering a room?"

"I'm adopted as one of the family," answered the young man coolly. "Your daughter said she would be a sister to me!"

A FORECAST OF FASHION.

The Plaited Skirt a Favorite Model For Fall Costumey.

The skirt for walking gowns that will be most seen this fall is tight fitting over the hips and down almost to the knees. At this point it is finished off with a deep plaiting that is as flat and full as that of the genuine Scotch kilt.

There is every reason to think that the new sleeves will be less close fitting, especially at the elbow. When of thin material there will be a decided drooping effect at the elbow.

Moyen age styles will hold good through the autumn, and every day the waist line seems to be getting nearer and nearer the knee line.

Fishwife drapery about the hips, with a bouffant finish at the back of the skirt, has been exploited in a number of late summer costumes and will continue in vogue.

The smartest street gowns this autumn will be made of silk. A charming costume seen lately was of green moire silk, with the kilted skirt edged with a deep band of taffeta of the same shade. A border of taffeta outlined the tunic drapery and trimmed the bodice, which boasted a square sailor collar of taffeta and a tie of the same fabric.

The skirt illustrated is one of the new fall models. The panel effect produced at the front is most attractive, yet it means only applied bands of trimming. The skirt is in seven gores and laid in inverted plaits at the back.

VANITY'S VISIONS.

Gowns For a Country Wedding—Attractive Hats of Linen.

At a recent wedding which took place on the lawn of a country place the bride wore a lingerie gown of cobwebby texture over a slip of soft, creamy silk. The lace sash gave the frock a slight empire effect. The bridesmaids' gowns were of lingerie, lace trimmed, worn over slips of green silk, and their sashes of white and pink pompadour ribbon. White brimmed v. e. chip hats were trimmed with full pink roses and green leaves. The black velvet streamers were knotted on the shoulders, and the girls carried huge bouquets of sweetpeas tied with pale green gauze.

The one piece linen dresses, worn with or without a gümpe, have been enthusiastically adopted by women of all ages. They have put the favorite coat and skirt suit in the shade, and it cannot be denied that they are a very attractive mode of attire.

One of the smartest millinery notions is for a straw in red brown or cinnamon shade, trimmed with black. These hats are just the thing for wear with rough tussors and heavy linen suits.

Ideal summer hats are made of linen or shantung silk, to match the gowns with which they are worn. The favorite shapes are those that have fairly high crowns and wide, shady brimmed underneath with some contrasting tint and draped with a soft silk scarf.

The shirt waist is one of the most satisfactory garments a boy can wear. The one illustrated includes the patch pocket that is dear to the masculine heart, and it is made with regulation shirt sleeves. The pointed yoke over the back is liked by many mothers.

A Clean Man

Outside cleanliness is less than half the battle. A man may scrub himself a dozen times a day, and still be unclean. Good health means cleanliness not only outside, but inside. It means a clean stomach, clean bowels, clean blood, a clean liver, and new, clean, healthy tissues. The man who is clean in this way will look it and act it. He will work with energy and think clean, clear, healthy thoughts.

He will never be troubled with liver, lung, stomach or blood disorders. Dyspepsia and indigestion originate in unclean stomachs. Blood diseases are found where there is unclean blood. Consumption and bronchitis mean unclean lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

prevents these diseases. It makes a man's insides clean and healthy. It cleans the digestive organs, makes pure, clean blood, and clean, healthy flesh.

It restores tone to the nervous system, and cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. It contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs. Constipation is the most unclean uncleanliness. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it. They never gripe. Easy to take as candy.

William Drenning of West Providence.

Don't fail to see that your own son, or your neighbor's son, who voted on age last fall, is Registered. He cannot vote if he is not. And Wednesday, September 1st, is the last day that this important matter can be attended to.

If you have a Democratic friend or neighbor who is sick, or away from home, or negligent in such matters, see to it that his name is upon the Registry before the list closes on Wednesday, September 1st. This can't be attended to after that date.

TO BE REMEMBERED

There is one fact that every Democratic voter, and particularly every Democratic Register or tax Assessor should remember, and that is that young men who voted on age last fall MUST be Registered or they can not vote under any circumstances. Others who have paid a State or County tax within two years may be able to swear in their votes, if they are not upon the Registry, but the voter who cast his first ballot in 1908 has no possible chance to do this. He is not upon any duplicate, has no tax assessed against him, and consequently cannot qualify to having paid a tax, as is necessary where voters are left off the Registry. By failing to register he practically and effectually disfranchises himself. There is no way by which he can vote, and Democrats should remember and see that every young Democrat who voted on age in 1908, is upon the polling list of 1909. And this must be seen to before the evening of September first. Don't forget this.

Prof. Tanger Grateful

As our leavetaking is somewhat sudden, Mrs. Tanger and I desire to express our appreciation for the associations we have formed in Bedford.

As principal of the schools, I appreciate the support the schools have received from the patrons, the interest and cordial feeling manifested by the local press, the confidence of the directors, the co-operation of the teachers, and especially the kindness and the courtesy of the boys and girls. I wish the school a high order of advancement, and I hope that my successor may enjoy as pleasant associations in his work as I have enjoyed in mine.

A WESTERN TRIP

Impressions of Quincy, Ill., Described by Miss Blair.

Sunnyside Farm, Van Wert, Ia. Editor Gazette:

Considering that several weeks have elapsed since my other letter to you, I have concluded that perhaps extracts from my diary can tell you more than I of my stay in Quincy.

Quincy, Ill., July 9—Left Terre Haute at 9:30 this a. m. and rode as far as St. Louis on the New York Limited. The service was splendid and as I was the only lady in the observation car, was neither crowded nor lonely. As everything was provided I wrote letters at the stationery desk, and amused myself looking at the beautiful country through which we were passing, much of which was explained by a dapper young man whom I met on the train.

From St. Louis to Quincy we ran along the river and, owing to recent rains, found it much swollen and overflowing its banks in many places. Indeed, so great had been the rise that crops are ruined, trains delayed and for some distance we were compelled to go over a track covered with water. We crossed the river on entering Quincy and before I was aware of it we had stopped at the station and I was being greeted by my uncle, A. R. Elder, and cousins.

At the house a hearty welcome from Aunt Anna and an equally hearty supper made me forget the wearisome ride, and later we all went to Indian Mound Park, which is but a five minutes' walk from my uncle's home. Here is land consisting of over two hundred acres covered with trees, shrubbery, and flowers, and with fine drives. The mounds from which the park derives its name are still standing and command a splendid view of the "Father of Waters." It was here, in pre-historic times, the Indians watched for canoes bearing hostile tribes and from its height we, too, looked out over that magnificent stream which is second to none. Finally, yielding to the insistent demonstrations of the over-affectionate mosquitoes, we left our post of observation for home—to sleep.

Saturday, July 10—Just returned from an evening down town where we had gone with a crowd of girls. While in Lincoln Park listening to the band concert I met Walter Sears, a nice but insignificant little fellow who, frightened at the bevy of girls on all sides, soon vanished from sight. Lincoln Park is centrally located and is made famous by having had within its grounds the great Lincoln-Douglas debate. A large boulder still marks the spot where those noted opponents stood. In going over the city and noting names of business houses I find many of the most prominent are German and Irish.

Sunday, July 11—Rained all morning, but as afternoon was bright and warm we four girls went to call on the Linnemeyers, friends of my cousins, and as other charming girls joined us we had a fine afternoon spent in conversing and music. At five a delicious luncheon was served. Right here I want to note that I was amazed at the hospitality of those whom I met. Several girls of the crowd signified their intentions of entertaining for me, a stranger. Everywhere I go, on every side I find such a kind, true spirit. The Vernon Avenue Church which I attended tonight was pretty but not pretentious, and owing to the warm evening the congregation was small. Quincy seems to have numerous saloons—and churches.

Monday, July 12—My cousins entertained for me, and again I met a number of attractive girls. We spent a delightful evening in games, music, etc., and scarcely noticed the absence of "men;" but I wondered where they were and why a town which is rated so high for its industries and wealth should have so few eligible young men. It was predicted before I left home I would meet my "affinity" on this trip but no cupid exists for me in Quincy. I saw him in Terre Haute once—carrying Psyche in a moving picture show!

Tuesday, July 13—This morning, in company with Uncle Albin, I visited the Old Soldiers' Home which covers two hundred twenty-five acres of land near the city and much resembles a small town with its avenues and streets. The grounds are beautifully laid out in flowers and trees and everything was in excellent condition. In winter there are within the home two thousand inmates, a certain number occupying each cottage, a long brick residence; the blacks being in one to themselves. All intoxicating drinks are forbidden inside the grounds, but from the blooming contents of several whom I passed on the sidewalk I would infer it is not wholly withheld from those with inhibiting tendencies. We visited the main office building and from its tower looked out over the city, and no grove could have looked more enticing than Quincy with its wealth of shade trees. Also, saw through the opera house, where the veterans are occasionally entertained; the hospital, laundry, heating plant, etc. The most interesting place to me, however, was the cook-house, where the meals are prepared for the entire home. Here the cooking is done in large metal boilers run by steam and each department is presided over by an expert cook. I ascertained from one of them that from ten to fourteen bushels of potatoes are consumed daily and thirty-five pounds of coffee used at each meal.

OLDHAM REUNION

Over 300 People Present—Interesting Program.

Saturday, August 21, was a gala day for the Oldham family in the sugar grove of Joseph Oldham near Crumb, Somerset County, it being the first reunion of the descendants of William Oldham, a pioneer of that part of the county who moved from Chestnut Ridge, near Fishertown, to the old homestead now owned and occupied by Joseph Oldham, in the year 1828, taking with him his wife, five sons and five daughters.

Over 300 descendants and friends were in attendance from Bedford, Somerset, and Cambria Counties. Various games were engaged in by the younger people, while the older ones talked of former times till the noon hour when the luncheon prepared for the occasion were spread beneath the large maple trees and partaken of by the many who were present.

After the repast, the following program of exercises was carried out, William H. Oldham of Johnstown acting as chairman: Reading of 116th Psalm by Rev. T. J. Barlett of Moxham, after which he delivered a short address, telling of the many benefits that could be derived from a gathering of that kind, and expressing the hope that the future reunions of the Oldhams would prove as successful as the first one. Following his address the assemblage joined in singing one stanza of "Rock of Ages." Prayer was offered by Rev. Barlett.

A permanent reunion organization was effected. Mrs. Nellie Garlinger of Johnstown, who was largely responsible for the first gathering, was elected president; William Oldham of Ryot, first vice president; G. W. Leyton of Reitz, second vice president; W. E. Oldham of Moxham, secretary; William Beckley, assistant secretary, and Joseph Oldham, treasurer. The chairman was instructed to appoint one member of each of the original families of the eight children of William Oldham, in connection with the officers, as an executive committee. Two of the families, those of Thomas and Mary (Mrs. Harrison Jones) live in Iowa.

The organization was followed by an address by J. A. Cuppet of New Paris, who was well acquainted with many of the older members of the clan. He told of the experiences of the older members of the family during their earlier days on the mountains as he remembered from his association with them.

The entire assemblage was photographed by L. G. Harnick of Johnstown. Many partook of a second meal before leaving the pleasant grove.

Factory Increases Capacity

During the last week H. C. Heckerman has added to his peanut plant another seven-foot roaster, making four in all, with a capacity now of fifty bushels every thirty to forty minutes. This addition gives Mr. Heckerman's factory the largest roasting capacity of any peanut factory in the country.

Running twelve hours a day these roasters will now turn out five cars of roasted nuts a week. The main output of this factory is Fort Bedford Package P-Nuts, but during the last two years a large trade on 5c and 1c private brand salted peanuts has been established and in order to print these private brand packages for the various jobbers throughout the country, four job printing presses were added and are kept in constant use.

The main drawback at present is insufficient female help. Both white girls and colored girls of good character can secure work and each are nicely located in their several departments.

Centerville

August 25—Folks are fast gathering for the S. S. convention, which promises to be a big day. The president of the M. . Conference, Rev. Sheridan, was here but received a message from his home that his wife was taken sick suddenly and to come at once. Rev. Green hurried him to Cumberland, where he took the train and for Baltimore, his home.

Rev. H. C. Rose, wife and daughter, of Saxton, are taking part in the convention and intend to spend a couple weeks with home folks and many friends.

Rev. Hugh McClintic and wife, of Oreville, O., who have been spending a few weeks in the county, left the Valley Monday to go to e, but after arriving in Bedford learned that smallpox was very bad in his town. 11 cases being reported, so they did not decide when they will leave.

Rev. Martin Gillum, one of our self-made boys, a former correspondent of The Gazette, now of Baltimore, Md., has been here since Saturday and will remain for a couple weeks. All are glad to see Mart, as he is familiarly known, and he is glad to return to his old home and mingle with friends. He is accompanied by his wife and two sons.

A few students can yet be accommodated in the dormitories of the Lock Haven State Normal School for the fall term beginning September 6. The school is usually filled during the entire year, hence the number of rooms are limited. You will make no mistake if you select this thoroughly established school. Write for a catalog.

Governors of Pennsylvania

DAVID RITTENHOUSE PORTER—1839-1845.

David Rittenhouse Porter's father was a Revolutionary army officer whose services to the country brought him the offer of the position of brigadier general in the army and of secretary of war, both of which, however, he declined. It was as assistant in his father's office of surveyor general that he first became known to the public. He represented Huntingdon county in the legislature in 1819 and 1820. He was sent to the state senate in 1830 and two years later was elected governor. The Anti-Masonic party contested his election, and considerable disturbance resulted, amounting almost to an uprising and known as the "buckshot war." Governor Porter gave a very satisfactory administration, however, and was re-elected by an overwhelming majority. He was strong in his support of transportation improvements, and much credit is due him for the advancement made along these lines while he was governor.

JOSEPH RITNER—1835-1839.

Born in 1780 in Berks county, Joseph Ritner began life under many handicaps, but he succeeded in obtaining an education which fitted him for the serious duties of life. He represented Washington county in the legislature from 1820 to 1826 and served for a time as speaker. He was twice the candidate of the Anti-Masonic party for governor, but was defeated each time by George Wolf. He was elected in 1835 and served one term. He put into practical operation Governor Wolf's common school policy and was in full sympathy with it. There were lively times in Pennsylvania politics in those days. When in 1839 Governor Ritner was defeated for re-election by about 5,000 votes charges of fraud were made and an investigation by the legislature was demanded. The Democrats won, and Governor Ritner retired to private life. He died in 1869 at the age of ninety years.

Literary Notes

Despite its youthfulness, there is no state in the Union more interesting, or better worth watching, than Oklahoma. The name was given to it by the Indians, and means "The Beautiful Land," and a beautiful land it is. Some of its most curious aspects are commented upon in Day Allen Willey's article, "A Patchwork Quilt of Humanity," in the September Lippincott's. It may make you want to go there, and it may not. But it's worth reading.

Mary Roberts Rinehart's name is one to conjure with among people who like lively, entertaining fiction. Her books, "The Circular Staircase" and "The Man in Lower Ten," have had an enormous sale, and as her publishers are clamoring for new novels, she finds little time for writing short stories. A characteristic tale by her will be found in the September Lippincott's. It is entitled "What Happened to Father," and contains all the humor and charm which have made her large works so popular.

Lesson IX.—Third Quarter,
For Aug. 29, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, I Cor. xiii, 1-13.
Memory Verse, 8—Golden Text, I
Cor. xiii, 13—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

We have been reading in the Acts of people in many places who, having heard of the living and true God and of His Son Jesus Christ our Lord, who gave Himself for our sins that He might purify unto Himself a peculiar people zealous of good works, a people to represent Him here a little while and then share His kingdom and glory forever, truly received Him and were willing to endure anything for His sake if only they could win others to Him. Paul tells us in this epistle that he would endure anything rather than hinder the gospel of Christ and that his aim was by all means to save some (chapter ix, 12, 22). Believers are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called saints, called unto the fellowship of Jesus Christ our Lord to be laborers together with God, blood bought temples of the Holy Spirit who worketh in each one as He pleases, dividing to each His gifts severally as He will (chapters 1, 2, 9; III, 9; V, 10, 20; xii, 4-11). If we had the choice of gifts one might prefer wisdom, another knowledge, another faith, another gifts of healing, another tongues, etc., but here Paul says by the Spirit that, while it is well to covet the best gifts, there is a more excellent way, the way of love, and that is our lesson today. To know and believe the love which God hath to us and to live in that love as manifested in Jesus Christ should constrain us to such yieldedness and restful confidence in Him that His choice for us as to place or manner of service will be always most satisfactory to us. Esther might have asked and received many things from the king's chamberlain when her turn came to appear before the king; but, being in herself fair of form and good of countenance, she asked nothing but what the keeper appointed (Est. ii, 7, margin, 15). If our aim is to please our King and be beautiful to Him we will be quite satisfied with all His appointments for us.

Strangely, we have come to a time when the matter of speaking in tongues is very much on some minds, but a study of chapter xiv teaches us that it is better to utter words easy to be understood, even five such words, than ten thousand words which no one can understand (xiv, 9, 19). No name of God or of Christ is found in our lesson chapter; but, as one has said, a photograph of a dear friend does not require the friend's name on it to enable us to recognize it, and we have here a most beautiful word picture of the Lord Jesus, for in no one else was such love ever seen. It seems unnecessary to say that the word "charity" should be "love" as it is in the revised version, and it is evidently the love of John iii, 16; I John iii, 16; I, 9-11.

The love of God is the greatest thing mortals ever heard of, and the greatest love of mortals is but the faintest reflection of the infinite love of God. The first three verses of our lesson are most startling when we consider how much eloquence and oratory and knowledge and a kind of faith and giving of money and self-sacrifice may all go for nothing—just wood, hay and stubble to be burned. When we think of the speaking and singing that abound simply for the money that is in them, and the many other things simply to obtain praise from men or from a sense of duty, and that nothing counts in God's sight that is not from love to Him, is it not all most heart searching? Then see in verses 4 to 7 the quality of this love. It is kind even to those who make it suffer, never jealous or envious or self assertive or proud, never seeks anything for itself, is never provoked, never thinks or speaks evil of any one, rejoices only in what is true and goes on bearing, believing, hoping and being all things for love's sake. It was truly never so seen but in Christ Himself, and yet He desires to reproduce that life in His redeemed ones (II Cor. iv, 10, 11; Gal. ii, 20) and will if we are only willing to die to self and let Him rule in our hearts. It means such a handing over of ourselves to Him that we have no say in anything any more, but that we just live in that good and acceptable and perfect will of God.

This age in which we now live, with its teaching and tongues and knowledge, shall give place to a better age in which love shall be more fully seen on earth. There is nothing perfect now on our part. Everything is only in part, as far as our knowledge of God and manifestation of the life of Jesus are concerned, but then we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is. Even our bodies shall be like His, immortal, incorruptible (xv, 50-53; Phil. iii, 20, 21). While we shall not be truly of age and enjoy eternal life fully till the resurrection of our bodies, for which even such as Abraham and others still wait (Heb. xi, 39, 40), we should live more than we do in the power of the age to come and not talk and act so much like babes who live only on milk (chapter iii, 1-4). God's child in this world is not what he will be, has not what he will have and sees not what he will see, but while here may receive fully and in childlike simplicity the revelation of God, exercising simple faith in what God says.

SHOCKED THE HOSTESS.

A Practical Joke That Was Perpetrated by Eugene Field.

There are many stories incident to the career of the late Eugene Field, who not only wrote songs for the children, but who was at times fond of practical jokes, which illustrate his inimitable humor.

On one occasion he played an unexpected part at a dinner given in honor of himself and his wife which, while it had its serious side, was made all the more enjoyable by the grave deportment of Mr. Field.

The dinner was given by a leading Chicago family. When all were seated Mr. Field repaired to the pantry, only to return in a few moments with a dozen or more costly gold embroidered wineglasses, the property of the hostess, which, to her silent astonishment, he proceeded to hand over to each guest one by one, a souvenir of the occasion.

Great was the merriment when it was realized that the hostess had not contemplated parting with her cherished glasses. But Mr. Field was not yet content. Returning them to the pantry by previous arrangement with the butler, he took up a tray of old bottles and other broken glassware and, pretending to stumble, dropped it on the floor, apparently shattering the valuable wineglasses.

The feelings of the hostess may be imagined, for it was some time before the real situation was understood.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect it.
How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a brick dust sediment, or settling, stringy or milky appearance often indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back are also symptoms that tell you the kidneys and bladder are out of order and need attention.

What To Do.
There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills almost every wish in correcting rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. Corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often through the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest because of its remarkable health restoring properties. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.
You may have a sample bottle sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. Mention this paper and remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Which DO YOU Prefer

The Cheap or the Good?
When you ask for paint remember the following facts:
1st. Time costs more than paint.
2nd. One gallon of good paint covers twice the surface as a cheap paint will cover.
3rd. The cost of applying a gallon of good paint is only about half the cost of applying a poor one.
4th. When you use a cheap paint you must repaint on an average of every two years—sometimes oftener.
5th. Good paint always leaves the surface to be repainted in good condition—while a cheap paint leaves the surface in a condition that necessitates scraping before repainting.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

A COLD RECEPTION.

By JAMES CARTER SCOTT.
[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"My dear," said Mr. Burwell to his wife, "I have invited young Farrell to dinner tomorrow evening. He has been very polite to me at the club, chatting, playing billiards, cards, anything I have fancied, with me just as if I were his own age. Naturally I wish to make him some return. He is alone at his home, his father and mother being in the country, and no doubt an invitation to dinner will be very acceptable to him. Indeed, he has told me he is very lonely. Let us dine in the conservatory and by daylight."

"And I wish you to speak to Adele. I have brought several of my young men friends home, partly on her account, for I prefer that she should choose a husband from among those I introduce, and she has treated them so indifferently—not to say shabbily—as to cause me excessive mortification. There were Hollabird, worth a million, Stevens, heir to the largest manufacturing business in the city, and—"

"Adele is full of fun, and she found both these young men very matter of fact."

"Full of madness, rather, to throw away such opportunities. Please tell her for me that I expect her for my sake to at least treat Farrell with politeness."

The next evening at 6 o'clock Miss Burwell picked up a hose in the yard before her father's house with which the gardener had been watering the grass and began to amuse herself by putting a stream on the hot stones of the walk that led to the gateway. This gateway, by the bye, was through a brick wall about as high as a man's head. Presently the young lady saw the hats on the other side of the wall approaching and heard her father's voice saying on reaching the gate, "After you."

A young man in evening dress under a light overcoat appeared at the opening. Whether through nervousness on Miss Burwell's part of miscalculation or what not, the young man received a charge of water on his shirt front.

A moment later there was an interesting tableau. Miss Burwell stood regarding Mr. Farrell with an expression on her face of (at least apparent) commiseration. Mr. Burwell, who had followed his guest through the gateway, stood regarding his daughter angrily, while Mr. Farrell was wiping the water out of his eyes with his handkerchief. As soon as he could see he looked down at his dripping clothes, then up at Miss Burwell, and smiled.

"Adele!" exclaimed the father sternly.

"Oh, papa, I'm so sorry!"

"Go into the house."

"Not without the proprieties, Mr. Burwell," said Farrell. "I'm a stickler for the proprieties. Aren't you going to introduce me?"

"I crave the gentleman's pardon," said the girl, with proper humility. "Something must have—"

"Certainly it did," Farrell interrupted. "How could the thing otherwise have occurred? You are Miss Burwell, I presume," raising his dripping hair "Very pleased to meet you."

"Come inside," said the paternalist grimly to his guest, "and I'll see what I can do for you."

Dry clothes having been provided—they were much too large—the family sat down to dinner. Much to the surprise of the elder people, Adele treated the man she had ducked with consideration, commiserating him upon the misfortune she had brought upon him while he avowed that he detested evening dress and was delightfully comfortable in his loose clothes. Mr. Burwell for awhile nursed his wrath, awaiting an opportunity to punish his daughter, but the young people got on so pleasantly that before the dinner was half finished he was laughing and joking in the best of humor. After dinner Mr. Farrell and Miss Burwell strolled out into the front yard.

"I don't see how it could have happened," said Adele. "I think an insect must have—"

"Turned the nozzle," interrupted Mr. Farrell. "I saw it aim straight for my shirt front."

Miss Burwell said nothing for a few moments. A smile was struggling with her lips. Presently she put out her hand, which the young man grasped.

"You're a brick!" she said.

"No slang, if you please. I can stand cold water, but I hate slang, especially when I've had occasion to get up on my ear."

"So I perceive."

"But enough of this monkeying. I've been spending weeks jollyng your father at the club in order to get him to invite me here. When I arrived—well, I got rather a cold reception."

"That was to pay you for—"

"What?"

"Not coming before."

"How could I?"

"Nonsense! There were lots of ways."

"I couldn't think of any till I found that Mr. Burwell of our club was your father. I immediately went at him hammer and tongs. He was might-slow about inviting me."

"That's because I've turned down every one he has brought."

"I wish you'd turned that hose down when I came."

"It's time for us to go in. Now, be careful and don't—"

"Let the cat out of the bag. No much."

Several years later, when his daughter as Mrs. Farrell told Mr. Burwell what he didn't know of this story, he opened wide his eyes and said:

"And they say parents should guide the way to their children's marriages."

How Prof. Anderson Invented Foods Shot from Guns

He was seeking a way to break up starch granules, so the digestive juices could get to them.

Cooking or baking only begins to do that. No old-time method breaks up all of the granules.

So he conceived the idea of blasting those granules to pieces by an explosion of steam.

And these foods resulted—the most delicious, most digestible cereal foods ever created.

Puffed Wheat—10c Puffed Rice—15c

These are the foods invented by Prof. Anderson, and this is his curious process:

The whole wheat or rice kernels are put into sealed guns. Then the guns are revolved for sixty minutes in a heat of 350 degrees.

That fierce heat turns the moisture in the grain to steam, and the pressure becomes tremendous.

(12)

Each kernel, by the explosion, is puffed to eight times size. It is made four times as porous as bread.

It is made nut-like and crisp, ready to melt in the mouth.

They are made so enticing that children delight in them. Grown folks, too.

They are so irresistible that seventeen million dishes were consumed last month.

When will you find them out?

Then the guns are unsealed, and the steam escapes. Instantly every starch granule is blasted into a myriad particles.

The kernels of grain are expanded eight times. Yet the coats are unbroken, the shapes are unaltered. We have simply the magnified grain.

One package will tell you why people delight in them. Order it now.

The Pennsylvania Railroad WANTS YOUNG MEN

The fall term of the PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD SCHOOL OF TELEGRAPHY, at Bedford, Pa., opens second week in September, and at the present time can take a limited number of students in the school.

The Pennsylvania Railroad School of Telegraphy has 150 Graduates in Salaried Positions Now in the Railroad Service, and the demand is greater than the supply for properly trained young men—Strong Morally, Mentally and Physically.

This is a splendid opportunity for young men between the ages of 17 and 25 to fit themselves in the theory and practice of Railway Telegraphy and Business, to fill the increasing vacancies in railway service.

The school is modern in every respect, and is thoroughly equipped with the latest devices, including a Miniature Railroad, necessary to master the courses; has experienced teachers, and furnishes a high order of instruction. It is expected that students will graduate in from six to eight months.

The Terms are: Entrance fee $1.00; Tuition $2.00 per month.

Good board can be secured for $3.50 per week up.
